These products may be used for a variety of purposes. In particular, some dental adhesive tape products are used to provide and protect a dental patient's gums during a dental treatment procedure. For example, a dental adhesive tape product may be used in the form of a gasket material or dam material to protect the gums during restorative and other procedures, such as fillings, root canals, or dental implants, to name a few examples. With respect to gasket materials, these products are typically used when filling a tooth cavity or when protecting the area of the tooth adjacent to the cavity from the mixing of amalgam and other filling materials. For example, dental adhesive tape products are often used in combination with amalgam in the filling of a tooth cavity. The gasket material keeps the area of the tooth adjacent to the cavity dry, prevents the mixing of amalgam and other filling materials, and ensures a good seal against the tooth in order to protect the filling from the environment. Other uses of dental adhesive tape products are to protect the gum area prior to performing a root canal procedure, to protect the filling or a dental crown from external forces, such as chewing, biting, or other forces, or to protect the filling or dental crown during the final stages of the restoration prior to completion of the filling or crown. Traditionally, gasket materials are comprised of a material, such as a polymeric material, which is stretched over the filling in the cavity. One drawback of such traditional gasket materials is that they may lose their integrity and allow the amalgam or other filling material to mix with the tooth during the course of the restoration or tooth repair procedure, thereby altering the tooth and potentially damaging the tooth. Another drawback of these traditional gasket materials is that the addition of the gasket material typically increases the length of the procedure and, therefore, may not be ideal for many applications. One example of a gasket material, or dam material, is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,925,745, which is incorporated herein by reference. This patent is generally directed to a composite material which is applied to a tooth or dental restoration and to
