atex.org, such as the possibility of water scarcity, and to the potential consequence of the resulting disputes. In addition, an approach based on water-sharing is very different from a water-exchange approach, as water-sharing presupposes different rights and responsibilities than water-exchange. In particular, the question of where the money

comes from arises.
Furthermore, the book
discusses the knowledge,
methods and tools for the creation of river

basins, the
implementation and
coordination of these models as well as the best practices and
lessons learnt from the past and the present.

Another field of
expertise lies within the

international cooperation on river
basin management,
which often involves organisations such as the European Commission,
the United Nations and the United States.
Lastly, a new challenge for European research and policymaking is the growing importance of the relationship between cities and water. For example, many of the water problems of megacities are due to large-scale water consumption for washing and watering

the urban landscape.
