nutshell, insurance premiums have risen sharply in recent years. And the costs of medical treatment continue to escalate. While you may feel confident that you're covered when you get sick, there are some factors you may not have considered. For example, the following factors should be considered in relation to your personal health insurance. By now, you may have received a renewal notice for your current insurance policy. If you have, you probably want to know how much you're paying for your policy and how much your premium has gone up over the years. Are you comfortable with the services you receive? If you're not happy with the services you receive, or the level of coverage you receive, it's important to know this before you renew your health insurance policy. For example, when you renew your health insurance, you may receive a letter from your insurance company that reads something like this: "We've noticed that you've had open wounds that haven't been treated by your primary care physician. We think you should have this taken care of right away." You might say to yourself, "Who's this guy? I never asked him to take care of anything!" But before you lose sleep wondering who this so-called primary care physician is, and why he's expecting you to pay him to take care of your problem, you should ask yourself if you're comfortable with the services you're receiving. If you're not, then you may want to think about whether your current insurance plan is worth the money you're paying in premiums. It's not uncommon for consumers to renew their policies without reviewing the services they're receiving. You may need a medical exam There are some 2d92ce491b
