Mounting evidence suggests that an early step in heart disease progression is the creation of small arteries that feed heart muscle cells with blood and oxygen. When this supply runs short, myocardial cells die and a heart attack occurs. Building on previous research, a team of researchers at UMDNJ-New Jersey Medical School, led by Hannelie Gaubitz of the Cardiovascular Research Institute (CRI) at the University of New Jersey School of Medicine, have found a remarkable link between a protein known as Vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF) and this devastating disease. The researchers further discovered that certain compounds known as lipids, or fat molecules, can block VEGF-induced angiogenesis, and that these lipids also slow the growth of small arteries. Their work was published in the January 2007 issue of the Proceedings of the National ba244e880a
