The biggest surprise in Week 7 for the Bears was the return of Trubisky. After managing a goose egg in the first half of the week, the second half of the games saw Trubisky demonstrate that he can, in fact, win games. I will mention a couple of things here, but I will also discuss the game in depth when I discuss the remainder of the teams on Friday. First, the defense was much better in the second half of the week. Obviously the return of Hicks caused the most disruption for the Redskins, but Hicks can make an immediate impact. The question for the Bears is whether Hicks can have a long-term impact. Much of the disruption in the first half of the game came when the safeties had a combined 5 total tackles. Hicks had 7 tackles. Aside from Hicks, the Bears defensive linemen dominated on the day. Here is a stat you are not going to hear used much: the Bears D-line had 23 total tackles. The Redskins D-line had 15. I watched the game intently, but perhaps what stood out the most for me was the role of the secondary. Green Bay trotted out an array of different sets, and the Bears
