What makes it even more complicated for the older adult is the confusion of feelings that they may be experiencing. Life is at times very confusing and for the older adult to be able to meet others in their society may be a challenge. Let's take a look at a few of the signs that older people have. These signs may help them to understand their feelings and not confuse them. Older people often confuse loneliness with depression. If they find themselves becoming depressed and not talking to anyone, they may assume that they have less of a person to turn to. People who feel lonely, whether it is due to bad luck, family issues, or friendships are making less of an effort than others to go out and meet others. This is where people become confused and think that they are lonely and depressed. Falling In Love For the older adult to fall in love may be quite complicated. It may mean that someone does not have a job and is a boozier. It may mean that the person is not that attractive. It may mean that someone has just moved into the neighborhood. No matter what, the older adult may feel left out or out of place. It doesn't mean that they want to be left out, but that they are feeling lonesome and miserable because they are no longer part of the community. Some feelings that older adults can have is that they will not receive any attention. Some older adults feel as if they have had their youth and now they are not as attractive and they feel that others are more attractive and receive more attention. They may feel like they are being pushed to the side and becoming depressed and lonely. No matter what older adults feel, falling in love should not be confused with loneliness.

I have 2 arrays in Java, one contains a list of products (lets say products), and one is a list of properties of each product (lets say properties).

I want to join those 2 together. The issue is that there are sometimes more properties than products so I have to do something like. `for (int j=0;j < joined = products.stream() .collect(Collectors.toList()); joined.forEach((product, property) -> { // Do something with "property" and "product" });` A: You could use reduce on an array to join the two arrays together: `int[] a = {1,2,3,4}; int[] b = {3,5,7,9}; Arrays.stream(a).reduce(0, (a, b) -> a + b).orElse(0);` If you are dealing with lists of objects rather than arrays, you can just simply use the methods already available in your object: `String[] a = {"a", "b", "c", "d", "e", "f", "g"}; String[]` 82138339de
