The known transmissive wavelength division demultiplexer has a structure which is implemented by a waveguide layer. The waveguide layer is designed in such a way that it has a partial transmission bandwidth with respect to a first wavelength range, and a high reflection bandwidth with respect to a second wavelength range. The partial transmission bandwidth is determined by one or a plurality of Bragg resonators, which are inserted into the waveguide layer. The invention is based on the problem of further increasing the bandwidth and optimizing the quality of an optical device of this type. The optical device according to the invention has the advantage that a wide wavelength range is used for partial transmission, and particularly a wavelength range that is both in the near and far field and is free of mode mismatch. Furthermore, the partial transmission bandwidth is substantially wider than the reflection bandwidth. The waveguide layer in this case comprises a lower layer and an upper layer, which are connected to one another and reflect and/or transmit light. In this case, the lower layer is designed to be used as a waveguide layer for transmitting light, and the upper layer is designed to be used as a waveguide layer for reflecting light. The waveguide layer, which is in this case constructed of a layer which reflects light and/or transmits light, is preferably transparent for the light to be transmitted. It is also preferably used for providing a wavelength division demultiplexer. Advantageous further developments of the optical device according to the invention are given in the dependent claims.Q: Why does the number of occupied cells in a combination table of n objects sum to n?
