As a free program, it's also one of the most common programs for consumers to use. It is essentially the digital equivalent of a darkroom for light-sensitive images, and it's the one program for doing all of the basic editing of photos and images. Another free photo editing software that does a good job at light correction is PicMonkey, a free online photo editor created by Zooniverse, Inc., creators of the crowdsourced citizen science project ZooDocs. Numerous paid photo-editing apps, such as Adobe Photoshop, offer their own share of bells and whistles. But none can claim to provide the kind of power and versatility you'll find in PhotoRetouch. Using Photoshop for basic photo editing tasks is quite easy. However, Adobe Photoshop is far from the only program that is ideal for such basic tasks. The following is a look at other programs that are excellent image editors. GIMP GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program) can be downloaded directly from the Internet at www.gimp.org. As with all free programs, GIMP is available as a standalone product and as a Photoshop plugin. However, I recommend installing the standalone version, because it works with Windows, Mac, and Linux systems. If you're also using Photoshop, you can use its plugin to GIMP. GIMP's layers make image editing easy, since you can see what's underneath the image or overlay you're editing. As with any free program, GIMP has its rough spots and some bugs, and if you run into trouble, most of the usual fixes and fixes are available on the GIMP home page, www.gimp.org. iPhoto iPhoto (short for "iPad Photos," Apple's former name for its Photos application), is an image-editing program included with Apple's digital-media device, the iPad, and an iPhone/iPod touch. iPhoto is not directly available for PC systems, but you can use a third-party application, the free GIMP, to edit images from your PC. Lightroom Lightroom, a relatively new but good photo-editing app, costs $40 from Apple for the Mac or $80 for a perpetual license. Lightroom can edit RAW images and make adjustments such as brightness, contrast, and color. However, it is not a complete imaging

Activation of the cellular p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase by Triton X-100. The p38 mitogen-activated protein kinase (MAPK) is activated by a diverse array of extracellular stimuli and plays a central role in a number of cellular processes including inflammatory responses, cell growth and differentiation. Recent studies indicate a role for p38 MAPK in the membrane-mediated regulation of cytosolic Ca2+ but this requires further investigation. In order to determine whether nonionic detergents may activate the p38 MAPK, Chinese hamster ovary (CHO) cells were used as a model. Treatment with Triton X-100, but not with sodium deoxycholate, activated the p38 MAPK in these cells. The effect of Triton X-100 was dose-dependent, while deoxycholate was ineffective. The activation of the p38 MAPK by Triton X-100 and other nonionic detergents was enhanced by preincubation in serum-free medium. The activation of the p38 MAPK by Triton X-100 was reversed by preincubation with phosphatase inhibitors and by the tyrosine phosphatase inhibitor sodium orthovanadate, indicating the requirement for phosphorylation. In accordance with previous results, the activation of the p38 MAPK by serum was enhanced in CHO cells transfected with the human growth hormone receptor, but not in CHO cells stably expressing the human growth hormone receptor with a defective tyrosine kinase domain (K. Allor, M. T. Frank, C. A. Levin, and J. L. Parker (1995) Mol. Cell. Biol. 15, 5449-5460). Together these results indicate that the activation of the p38 MAPK by Triton X-100 is tyrosine kinase-dependent and in addition the kinase may be found in both ligand-dependent and ligand-independent functional states.S.O.S. (Pet of the Week) Santana was the victim of a horrific bicycle accident that left him with a broken leg, some facial cuts, and an endearing head of hair that is almost gone. Santana was surrendered to the Ohio SPCA because he had some small wounds on his face, but most of the injuries he received were to his head and leg. When the Ohio SPCA saw him, they said
